

International Public Law

Within the "International Public Law" course, students will gain an understanding of the key concepts, institutions, and principles specific to public international law and the norm-formation process; they will learn about the limits of the exercise of state jurisdiction over persons and territory, as well as the elements defining a state as a subject of international law.

Furthermore, students will be able to explain the rules governing the recognition of states and governments and those regarding state succession. They will understand the mechanisms for concluding and applying treaties, as well as the process of drafting the clauses of a hypothetical international treaty.

Students will master fundamental concepts regarding the interaction between national and international law, the subjects and sources of international law, and the notions specific to the settlement of international disputes - whether through jurisdictional or through politico-diplomatic means - and to state responsibility under international law.
